Habitat for Humanity dedicates homes today

Organization has built 56 homes since 1995

GYPSUM — Five more success stories will be added today to the local Habitat for Humanity affiliate.

Habitat for Humanity Vail Valley will dedicate five more homes, bringing their total to 56 since 1995.

“We are excited to help make the dream of safe, affordable homeownership a reality for five more deserving Eagle County families,” said John Welaj, executive director of Habitat Vail Valley. “Habitat is committed to strengthening communities and peoples’ lives and to creating opportunities for low-income families to develop equity and independence through homeownership.”

Like all Habitat homeowners, these five families contributed hundreds of hours of sweat equity, working on constructing their homes, as well as homes of others. They also participated in educational programs designed to strengthen the entire family and help to ensure their success as new homeowners, Welaj said.

The new homeowners will make monthly payments on a low-cost, no-interest mortgage. That money stays in the Vail Valley, and goes toward building more Habitat Vail Valley homes.

“The sweat equity hours were difficult, but so rewarding in the end,” said Jessica Mapes, one of the new Habitat Vail Valley homeowners. “The Habitat staff was so supportive and always there to lend an ear and keep us motivated. It has been a blessing being a part of this community.”
